North America, however, once the pos-sible wood storehouse for the world, has not enough wood to sumply its own demand, notwithstanding its 506,555,000 acres of wooded area. Even now it is atire surplus to the United States. Alhough large territories of forests, essecially in China, Corea, India and South America, remain to be utilized, it is certain that the question of the future wood supply of the world, now attractg the attention of economists, will coninne to excite great interest.
